Proceedings of the Society and the Board of Managers

June, 1910—June, 1913

Abstracts of Proceedings

JUNE 1910—JUNE 1913

At the meeting of the Board of Managers, September 9, 1910, the late Henry A. May was employed to search the records and locate the burial places of soldiers of the Revolution who were buried in Boston and its vicinity, and which had not been designated by "markers." The result of his search showed burials in the following grounds: Copp's Hill, 22; the Granary, 15; Boston Common, 15; Eustis Street, Roxbury, 16; Phipps Street, Charlestown, 11; Dorchester South, 6; Eliot Street, Jamaica Plain, 6; Westerly, West Roxbury, 5; Walter Street, Roslindale, 1. On motion of our late compatriot, William W. Bartlet, it was voted to authorize the Memorial Committee to place markers at such graves, and to affix name-plates to markers placed at tombs.

October 14, 1910, it was voted to contribute fifty dollars toward a memorial Flag Staff to be erected in Cambridge by Daughters of the American Revolution in memory of Revolutionary Soldiers and Patriots.

President Nathan Warren stated that a silver cup for the Lexington Minute-men's winter carnival would be given by individual members of the Society.

FIELD DAY AT MALDEN, OCTOBER 12, 1910

The Society held its annual Field Day at Malden and assisted in the exercises attending the unveiling of the momorial tablets at Bell Rock Park. The Revolutionary tablet which was originally placed on the boulder at Bell Rock was removed to give place to the new soldiers' monument and was replaced on the left façade of the base of the new monument, while the new Founders' tablet was placed on the opposite side of the façade. The exercises took place at 10:30 A. M. with the following program: Invocation by Rev. L. J. Birney; hymn, "Angel of Peace" by the high school chorus; introductory remarks by Frank E. Woodward, President of Malden Chapter, Sons of the American Revolution; address by Edwin S. Crandon, vice president of the State Society; address by Mrs. Adeline F. Fitz, president-general of the Daughters of the Revolution; address by Mayor George H. Fall; unveiling of the tablets by Miss Elizabeth

D. Walker and Miss Katherine Hall; hymn, "To Thee O Country," by the chorus; address by Sylvester Baxter, chairman of the Malden Park Commission; and an address by Charles E. Mann, president of the Malden Historical Society. Following the exercises at the park, the company of ladies and gentlemen visited the Public Library on their way to the Auditorium where the banquet was served. Vice-president Candon presided, and among the speakers were Hon. Levi S. Gould, formerly the first Mayor of Melrose, Hon. George H. Fall, of Malden, and Joseph Santosuoso, Esq., of Boston. The remainder of the afternoon was spent in a carriage ride through Middlesex Fells, which was one of the pleasantest features of the Field Day.

At the meeting held December 9, 1910, the following resolution on the death of William Williams Bartlet was unanimously adopted:

"RESOLVED, That in the death of Compatriot Bartlet this Society has lost one of its most loyal and efficient members, and the Board of Managers a wise and alert counselor whose interest in the aims of the Society was especially conspicuous during the few months he was connected with the Board.

"His Compatriots tender to the family of their lamented comrade their profound sympathy, and commend them to the comfort of God's infinite grace."

WASHINGTON'S 179TH BIRTHDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1911

The members of the Society met in the morning on the Essex Street side of Hotel Essex to dedicate a memorial tablet to Major-General Henry Knox. Master Joseph Atwood, a son of Luther Atwood, of Lynn, removed the American flag from the face of the bronze tablet affixed to the side of the hotel building.

The inscription on the tablet is:

Near this site was the birthplace of
HENRY KNOX
Volunteer at the Battle of Bunker Hill
Colonel of Artillery, 1775
Brigadier-General, 1776
Major General, 1781
Commander-in-chief of the Army, 1783
Secretary of War, 1785
He brought across the country on sleds for use at the Siege of Boston, 1776, the artillery captured at Ticonderoga
Placed by the Massachusetts Society
Sons of the American Revolution, 1911.

The company then adjourned to the hotel where they were addressed by President Nathan Warren, who formally commended the tablet to the care of the owners of Hotel Essex. Compatriot Leslie C. Wead, president of the company controlling the hotel property, promised that he and his successors in the company would hold the tablet in sacred reverence. Mr. Wead then delivered an appreciation of General Knox and his military and administrative services.

Brigadier-General Philip Reade, U. S. A. (ret.) delivered a short address on the life of General Knox.

The regular meeting of the Society was held at Hotel Vendome, President Warren presiding. Brig.-Gen. Philip Reade read a very interesting account of "Some Massachusetts Soldiers with Whom Washington Passed His Forty-sixth Birthday at Valley Forge." The paper covered the period between December 19, 1777, and June 19, 1778, and named by Massachusetts counties the principal officers from the Commonwealth who were with Washington at Valley Forge. About half the eight thousand soldiers who encamped there in December, 1777, were from Massachusetts.

On motion of Dr. F. A. Gardner, it was unanimously resolved that it was the sense of the Society that the records prepared by General Reade should be published by the State. Compatriot Edwin Day Sibley gave several very interesting readings entitled "Character Studies." Compatriot Dr. George B. Stevens read an excellent paper on the unfortunate Penobscot Expedition, or "Bagaduce Expedition." Compatriot Walter Kendall Watkins offered the following resolution which was unanimously adopted:

"RESOLVED, That the Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution protest against the attempt to change the name of Court Street in Boston, as tending to a confusion and contradiction in the historical associations of the most important epochs in American history, the American Revolution, and the Anti-Slavery agitation of the Civil War.

At the conclusion of the exercises luncheon was served and a social hour enjoyed.

ANNUAL MEETING, APRIL 19, 1911

The Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution held its twenty-second annual business meeting on Patriots' Day in the Old South Meeting House, the usual place of gathering, with excellent attendance. The retiring president, Nathan Warren, presided. Historian-General, David L. Pierson of New Jersey, was the guest of the Society. An interesting ceremony early in the proceedings was the trooping of the colors by a detail from Troop A of the first squadron of cavalry, the National Lancers, in command of Captain John S. Barrows, president of Boston Chapter, S. A. R.

The meeting opened with prayer by the Society's chaplain, Rev. Lewis Wilder Hicks of Wellesley. President Warren gave a résumé of the work of the Society and spoke also of future purposes and aims, especially in welcoming "young American blood of Revolutionary standard" to join our ranks.

The annual reports of the secretary-registrar, the treasurer, the historian and the auditors were read by those officials. Secretary Kimball reported the membership to be 1,635, of whom 86 had been admitted during the year. Treasurer Green reported that the total receipts had been $4,923.73, the expenditures $4,824.39, and that the cash balance on hand April 15 was $99.34. The auditors found the accounts to be correct and that the permanent fund, amounting to $6,567, is on deposit in approved savings banks; and that the reserve fund, on deposit, amounted to $971.78. In the absence of Historian Reade, the secretary read the Necrology for the past year, giving biographical notices of thirty-nine members who had died.

Of the delegates appointed to the Louisville, Kentucky, Congress of the National Society held May 1-3, 1911, Massachusetts was represented by Dr. Moses Greeley Parker, Edwin S. Crandon, Dr. Waldo E. Boardman, Webster Bruce, John G. Moseley and T. Julien Silsby.

The committee appointed to nominate officers for the ensuing year reported the following who were unanimously elected: President, Edwin Sanford Crandon, of Cambridge; vice-presidents, Hon. Luke S. Stowe of Springfield, Luther Atwood of Lynn, and Frank E. Woodward of Wellesley Hills; secretary and registrar, Herbert W. Kimball of Waban; treasurer, Charles M. Green, M. D., of Boston; historian, Brig.-Gen. Philip Reade, U. S. A. (retired) of Lowell; chaplain, Rev. Lewis W. Hicks of Wellesley; managers for three years, Allen H. Bagg of Pittsfield, Samuel Crowell, M. D., of Dorchester, George M. Rice of Worcester, Albert F. Amee of Cambridge, and James E. Seaver of Taunton. Charles E. Wiggin of Roxbury was elected for two years to fill the unexpired term of the late W. W. Bartlet.

At the conclusion of the business meeting the members marched to the American House preceded by a fife and drum corps, where in the large banquet room the retiring president, Nathan Warren, presided, and the newly-elected president, Edwin Sanford Crandon, was inducted into office. During the ceremony the members, standing at their places, sang "The Star Spangled Banner." The color sergeant of the Lancers gave the Society flag into the keeping of President Crandon, who made a short speech.

The after dinner speaking was begun by Hon. Charles D. Kimball, president of the Rhode Island Society, who extended its felicitations, and reminded his hearers of the fact that our ancestors, who had founded a nation, had nevertheless left something for the men of the present generation to do. Immigrants from the countries of the old world could not perhaps appreciate the blessings of a free government such as we enjoy, but Americans fully realize the blessings brought by our form of government, and it was for them to teach this fact to others.

David L. Pierson, historian general of the National Society, recalled some of the interesting Revolutionary incidents of New Jersey, and rejoiced that he was permitted to speak on Patriots' Day in Boston, which he described as "the hotbed of patriotism."

Charles Dana Burrage, president of the Sons of the Revolution in Massachusetts, and also a member of this Society, said there were ever recurring problems to be solved, problems that involved the welfare of countless thousands. Selfish dominations, the attempt to acquire for personal ends even the breathing spaces of the people, showed that there was a constant duty to perform, and a need to teach the true meaning of patriotism and obedience to the laws of God.

William E. L. Dillaway said the people were coming to a stage where great changes were to be met, questions of the initiative, the referendum and the recall as showing a need of more patriotic days instead of lessening the number of holidays, in order that patriotism might prevent the rule of the people from becoming the rule of the mob.

Nathan Warren, the retiring president, said that Americans might well take pride in the great strides that had been taken since April 19, 1775. The day was increasing in importance, and it would in time become one of the momentous days of the year. There was never a time when the day and its inspirations were needed more than now.

Mr. Warren announced that a committee appointed for the purpose had drawn up a testimonial for Dr. Charles M. Green, whose unselfish and devoted services as treasurer since 1892, the Society desired to acknowledge and this testimonial, which was beautifully engrossed, was read by President Crandon, chairman of the committee on the testimonial, and who was selected by Mr. Warren to present it to Dr. Green.

The after dinner speaking was brought to a close with a brief address by President Frederick W. Hamilton of Tufts College.

May 12, 1911. At a meeting of the board of managers it was voted to contribute fifty dollars towards a tablet the Berkshire County Chapter proposes to place near the site of Easton's Tavern, Pittsfield, in which the capture of Fort Ticonderoga was planned. At this meeting, it was voted to invite the National Society to hold their congress of 1912 in Boston.

THE EASTON MEMORIAL TABLET

Berkshire County Chapter, of Pittsfield, July 3, 1911, unveiled a bronze tablet on, or near, the site of the historic Easton's Tavern, which stood where now is situated the Berkshire Athenæum and Museum of Art, in which met the men who planned the capture of Ticonderoga. Joseph E. Peirson, president of the chapter, presided and addresses were made by Judge Edward T. Slocum; Dr. J. F. A. Adams, Hon. Luke S. Stowe and Hon. Walter F. Hawkins. The singing was by the pupils from the public schools, and the tablet was unveiled by daughters of Dr. and Mrs. F. K. Chaffee. The tablet bears the following inscription:

Near this spot stood
EASTON's TAVERN
Here on May 1, 1775, Colonel
James Easton and John Brown of Pittsfield and Captain Edward Mott of Preston, Conn., planned the capture of Fort Ticonderoga which on May 10 surrendered to the Continental Volunteers
under Ethan Allen with Colonel Easton
second in command

June 11, 1911. The Committee on Memorials reported it had placed 220 markers during the past year at graves of Revolutionary soldiers buried in Dorchester, Boston, Roxbury, West Roxbury and Charlestown and had sent to Compatriot D. A. Healey of Holyoke two markers to be placed in that city.

In recognition of the faithful work of Charles E. Alexander, editor of the patriotic department of the Boston Transcript, the Society of shared with the Daughters of the American Revolution in presenting to Mr. Alexander a fine mahogany colonial desk. The Daughters of the Revolution, also, gave a mahogany chair for the desk.

October 6, 1911. The Board of Managers unanimously adopted a resolution in appreciation of the devoted services of the Society's historian, Brig.-Gen. Philip Reade, in connection with the work of providing for a monument, the Commonwealth has erected at Valley Forge to commemorate Massachusetts soldiers who were with Washington during the winter of 1777-8.

FIELD DAY AT WORCESTER, OCTOBER 19, 1911

The 130th anniversary of Cornwallis' Surrender at Yorktown was celebrated by the Society holding its annual Field Day at Worcester by invitation of Worcester Chapter, Sons of the American Revolution. The threatening weather somewhat lessened the attendance, but the program prepared by Compatriots George M. Rice and Hon. Alfred S. Roe, who personally conducted the party and described the many places of historic interest, was carried out; among which is the Common, where stands the monument to Col. Timothy Bigelow (15th Continental regiment), the City Hall, which occupies the site of the Old South Church from which was read the Declaration of Independence for the first time in Massachusetts. Mayor James Logan received the company at City Hall and invited all to inspect the building.

From City Hall, trolley cars carried the party to the building of the American Antiquarian Society, where the librarian, Clarence S. Brigham, gave a short history of the Society, saying it was established one hundred years ago in an inland town to escape excessive taxation levied by the British on sea coast towns. After a most interesting inspection of the building, the party stopped at the tablet marking the birthplace of the eminent historian Bancroft, and on their return visited old Exchange Hotel where Washington ate his breakfast in 1789, and General Lafayette stopped in 1825. Hotel Warren was reached in time to partake of an excellent dinner served to eighty-five ladies and gentlemen, among whom was our "own son," John Adams, aged ninety-nine years.

Vice-president Frank E. Woodward presided at the dinner, and afterwards in a brief introductory speech presented his Honor, James Logan, mayor of the city, who made an address. (See Addresses).

Following the dinner, a visit was made to the General Artemas Ward colonial mansion at Shrewsbury, still owned by his descendants, two of whom were present, and every courtesy was extended to the guests who were shown through the many rooms of this historic old mansion with its priceless relics of Revolutionary days.

The return to Worcester was made in time to take the 4:55 train for Boston. A vote of thanks was given to Worcester Chapter for the very successful way in which it entertained the Society.

November 10, 1911. It was voted to place markers at the graves of Captain John Cushing who was buried in Freeport, Maine, and Elisha Adams, in Hopkinton. It was voted to contribute one hundred dollars to the building fund of the New England Historic Genealogical Society.

It was voted to constitute the president of the Massachusetts Society an active member of the "Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities."

December 8, 1911. It was voted to have printed and circulated among the members of the Society a catalogue of books in the Society's library.

It was voted to thank General Reade for the architect's designs for the Massachusetts Valley Forge Monument, and also to have the same suitably framed and hung in the Society's room.

February 9, 1912. It was voted to appropriate fifty dollars to place a bronze tablet at Danvers Centre in commemoration of Arnold's Expedition to Quebec. Later it was voted to pay the expense of obtaining a boulder for the tablet.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1912

The Society celebrated the 180th Birthday of George Washington at Hotel Vendome, Boston, at 10:30 A. M. President Edwin S. Crandon presided and there were about two hundred members present. After introductory remarks by President Crandon, "The Sword of Bunker Hill" was sung by Richard B. Hall, who also sang the "Star Spangled Banner," and the members joined in the chorus. Hon. Solon W. Stevens was the first speaker. He reviewed with optimism the affairs of the country and declared that conditions are gradually becoming better. Brigadier General Reade, U. S. A. (retired), gave interesting details concerning some of the men that Massachusetts had put into Washington's army from January 1, 1777. "The first mission of Washington at Valley Forge was unification. He was assisted by Steuben, Alexander Hamilton and Henry Knox, and it was then Washington prevented what threatened to be a loose confederacy of states. Valley Forge was the reveille of the army of the United States, the first call for which was sounded by Washington, who demonstrated that public safety required that enlistments be made for the war; that confederation under one commander did not mean a crown; that Continental Congresses and Councils were inefficient to win campaigns; that unskilled volunteers were no match, in the long run, for well-trained veterans; that a standing army was not a thing to be dreaded. Had Washington's army at Valley Forge been destroyed or scattered, the conquest of the Hudson River and the separation of New England from the Middle States might have been an easy task. The Massachusetts troops at Valley Forge were of the foremost actors in the various movements which culminated in that more perfect union of states secured by the Federal Constitution."

Hon. Horace H. Atherton, Jr., president of Old Essex Chapter, of Lynn, presented to the State Society in behalf of the Chapter, a white silk flag of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. President Crandon appropriately responded, and the unanimous thanks of the Society were given the Chapter for its generous gift. Following the presentation, a luncheon and social hour closed a most successful meeting.

April 12, 1912. It was voted to apply for a resident membership for the secretary, or registrar, in the New England Historic Genealogical Society.

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING, APRIL 19, 1912

The twenty-third annual meeting was held in the Old South Meeting House at 10:30 A. M. President Edwin S. Crandon presided, and the meeting opened with prayer by the chaplain, Rev. Lewis Wilder Hicks of Wellesley. Trooping of the colors was performed by a detail from Captain C. B. Appleton's Troop A, under command of Sergeant George W. Austin.

President Crandon prefaced his opening address by a brief tribute to Major Archibald Butt, who was among those lost in the Titanic disaster. In his address, President Crandon recalled the stirring incidents of one hundred and thirty seven years ago today, and he referred to its bearing upon the new conception of the relation of the people to the government. "Today, we who benefit so greatly in sharing this goodly heritage meet to rejoice in the benefits given by the God of our Fathers to their children, to consider gravely our duty and privilege in the work of perpetuating their names and principles; to review the year, to plan for the building of yet statelier mansions as the swift seasons roll."

The annual reports of the secretary-registrar, treasurer and historian were then read by those officials.

The secretary reported the total membership March 31, 1912, as 1,638. The number of "actual sons" of soldiers of the Revolution was reduced to six: thréé having died since the last meeting.

Treasurer Dr. Charles M. Green's report showed: Receipts, $3,785.70; expenditures, $3,436.96; cash balance in general fund, $198.08. The auditing committee, Charles F. Read, chairman, reported the treasurer's accounts correct, and the permanent fund, amounting to $6,991 is on deposit in approved savings banks; and that the reserve fund, amounting to $1,239.72 is on deposit in the State Street Trust Company. Total net assets, $8,428.80.

The historian, Brig.-Gen. Philip Reade, read the names of forty members who had died since the last annual report. General Reade took this occasion to remind the Society that probably not more than one-third of the members had sent to the secretary their autobiographies, and urged the delinquents to promptly file them.

Dr. Moses Greeley Parker of Lowell, President General of the National Society, brought words of greeting from that organization. Major Talbot Aldrich, president of the Sons of the Revolution in Massachusetts, also a member of this Society, extended the greetings of the Sons of the Revolution.

Resolutions offered by Nathan Warren were passed, expressing sympathy for the families of those lost in the Titanic disaster and for those saved, who have passed through such a trying experience. A unanimous vote of thanks was given to President Edwin S. Crandon for his valuable services during the past year.

The meeting then proceeded to ballot for officers for the ensuing year, resulting in the unanimous reëlection of the officers of the previous year. Five new managers were elected for three years, as follows: Webster Bruce of Lynn; Elmer H. Copeland, M. D., of Northampton; Charles C. Doten of Plymouth; Philip T. Nickerson of Boston; and Lawrence W. Jenkins of Danvers. The Society then adjourned to the American House for the annual dinner. President Crandon presided.

The after dinner speakers were Hon. Robert Luce, Lieutenant Governor of this Commonwealth; Dr. Moses Greeley Parker, President General of the National Society; Rev. Newton M. Hall, D. D.

of Springfield, former president of George Washington Chapter of that city; Robert Lincoln O'Brien and Lee M. Friedman. Vernon A. Field gave recitations to intersperse the various addresses.

THE BOSTON CONGRESS OF THE NATIONAL SOCIETY, MAY 20 AND 21, 1912

The twenty-third Annual Congress of the National Society, held its first day session in the Old South Meeting House, Boston, May 20, 1912, and its second day session, May 21, in Faneuil Hall, with an attendance of 215 accredited members, including 12 general officers and past presidents general.

At this congress, Dr. Moses Greeley Parker, of Lowell, who was elected president-general at the Louisville Congress the previous year, presided. The social functions comprised: Religious services at the First Church, corner of Berkeley and Marlborough Street, Sunday afternoon, May 19, 1912, at which Rev. William M. Gilbert of Clifftondale offered the invocation; appropriate music by a selected choir, and a sermon by Chaplain Rev. Lewis W. Hicks. Preceding the services a detail from the First Corps of Cadets, commanded by Captain Joshua Atwood of Company B, placed the national and state colors at the altar. On Monday, during the recess of the congress, President-General Parker entertained the officers at a luncheon at the Parker House. On Monday afternoon, the ladies were given a sight-seeing automobile trip through Old Boston. Monday evening, there was a general reception to delegates and ladies at Hotel Somerset. On Tuesday morning, special services were held in the Granary burial ground under direction of Boston Chapter. The ceremonies were preceded by a parade of detachments from the Worcester Continental and other military organizations, marshalled by Brig.-Gen. Charles K. Darling and Lieut.-Col. John S. Barrows, who acted as escort to the delegates to the congress, marshalled by Brig.-Gen. Philip Reade. The march was from Boston Common to the Granary ground, and from there to Faneuil Hall.

On Tuesday, after the adjournment of the congress, the delegates were entertained at luncheon in the Armory at Faneuil Hall by Colonel Everett S. Benton, captain of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company. On Tuesday afternoon, delegates and ladies were given a sight-seeing automobile trip through parts of Boston and to Cambridge and vicinity. On Tuesday evening, the delegates to the congress were tendered a banquet at Hotel Somerset by the Massachusetts Society. About two hundred and fifty were present. The ladies at the same time were given a banquet in the smaller ball-room, afterwards joining the members in the larger hall for the speeches. President Edwin S. Crandon presided as toastmaster. Addresses were delivered by retiring President-General Parker, President General-elect James M. Richardson, Rev. William H. Van Allen, Hon. Solon W. Stevens, Rev. Frederick W. Hamilton, and Edwin Day Sibley.

FIELD DAY AT SALEM AND DANVERS, SEPTEMBER 14, 1912

The dedication of a memorial tablet at Danvers commemorating the Quebec Expedition of 1775 was made the occasion for holding the annual Field Day at Salem and Danvers. About seventy-five ladies and gentlemen met at Salem and were received by a committee from Old Salem Chapter, who acted as guides to places of historic interest. After dining in Ames Memorial Hall, special electric cars took the party to Danvers Square, where the tablet, on a large boulder, is set on the lawn in front of "Ye old Berry Tavern." The exercises of unveiling the tablet were begun with prayer by Chaplain Lewis W. Hicks. President Crandon was then introduced by Compatriot Alvin R. Bailey, chairman of the committee on arrangements. Mr. Crandon spoke briefly of the purposes of the society and its work in erecting similar memorials in the state. Upon removal of the flag from the tablet, President Crandon said: "We dedicate and give this memorial as an inspiration of better citizenship and in recognition of the high and noble deeds of the past, and may God bless us one and all."

The weather had been threatening and a shower of rain fell at the conclusion of Mr. Crandon's address. Arrangements had been made for such a contingency and the company proceeded at once to the rooms of the Danvers Historical Society, where Charles H. Preston, a member of the committee, welcomed all in behalf of the Society and President Crandon introduced Hon. Alden P. White as the orator of the occasion. Judge Alden told in detail the history of Benedict Arnold's expedition to Canada, and the manner in which he handled the misdeeds of Arnold, mentioning him simply as "that other man" was unique and truly masterly. Dr. Frank A. Gardner, of Salem, a recognized student of Revolutionary history, followed Judge White with an interesting account of the personnel of the expedition, which was made up of two battalions with Colonel Benedict Arnold in command; Lieut.-Col. Christopher Greene of Warwick, R. I., Lieut.-Col. Roger Enos of Windsor, Conn., Major Return Jonathan Meigs of Middletown, Conn., Major Timothy Bigelow of Worcester. Among the other officers was Capt. Samuel McCobb of Georgetown; and two volunteers who held no commissions but later attained distinction and rank—Lieut.-Col. Aaron Burr and Eleazer Aswold.

Hon. George B. Sears was the last speaker. He spoke briefly of Danvers history and expressed the opinion that in all schools the local history of the cities and towns in which the schools are located should be taught.

October 11, 1912. Markers were contributed for the graves of Enos Reynolds, West Boxford, and Philip Bagley, Newburyport—Bunker Hill survivors who were present when the corner stone for the monument was laid in 1825, and at its dedication when completed in 1843. Markers were contributed for the graves of Lieutenant Thomas Whitman, buried in Stowe; Captain Peter Dolliver, in the Granary ground; Captain Joshua Wheeler, in Boston Common ground, and James Allen in the South ground. Voted to contribute five dollars for the "American Flag Association."

December 13, 1912. Voted to contribute fifty dollars towards the purchase of the historic Bellingham Cary Mansion in Chelsea.

January 10, 1913. Voted an appropriation of twenty-five dollars to purchase from Historian General Reade a copy of the fac-simile of autographs of the original members of the Society of the Cincinnati, together with an alphabetical list of the same showing rank, organization and residence of each.

WASHINGTON BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION FEBRUARY 22, 1913

The Society celebrated Washington's 181st birthday at the Hotel Vendome with an attendance of about two hundred members and guests. The routine business of the meeting began at 10:30 A. M., and luncheon was served at its close.

President Edwin S. Crandon presided and the speakers included Rev. Dr. Daniel D. Addison, who spoke on Washington, "The Great American." (See address in full). Edward J. Cox, who spoke on "Revolution in the Schools," and Brig.-Gen. Philip Reade, who as historian gave incidents connected with the Revolutionary campaigns; Walter Kendall Watkins offered a resolution that the Society consider the advisability of a closer examination of correspondence and documents in connection with the history of the Revolutionary period.

Remarks were made by C. J. H. Woodbury of Lynn, and Rev. F. E. Emrich, who advocated the translation into the various languages of the Europeans now flocking to these shores of information regarding this country and its history.

March 14, 1913. The secretary stated that Dr. Samuel Crowell had purchased a marker, with name-plate affixed, which he intended to place at the tomb of Ebenezer Withington in the North Dorchester Cemetery. Lieut.-Col. John S. Barrows offered the following resolution which was adopted by a unanimous vote:

"That the managers heartily approve of the changes now being made on the exterior of the Old South Meeting House, restoring it to the appearance of the time for which it is most famous, putting it in harmony with the Old State House and Christ Church, making more emphatic the reminders of those times not too well known by the present generation. The work of the Old South Society is heartily approved, and those changes which will make the noted building nearer to the condition existing in Revolutionary days, are endorsed by the Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution."

April 11, 1913. The board of managers having learned with great sorrow of the death of David Floyd, of Winthrop, on motion of President Crandon a resolution of condolence was extended to Mrs. Floyd, and a record made of his worthy character and faithful services.

Captain Charles C. Doten, of Plymouth, having resigned from the board of managers, it was voted to fill his unexpired term by the appointment of Charles French Read, of Brookline.

TWENTY-FOURTH ANNUAL MEETING, APRIL 19, 1913

Following its custom of many years, the Society assembled within the historic Old South Meeting House at 10:30 A. M., with a very large attendance of its members. President Edwin S. Crandon presided. A preliminary feature of the exercises was the "trooping of the colors" by a detachment from the Worcester Continentals, with drummers and fifer. Rev. Lewis W. Hicks, chaplain of the Society, made the opening prayer. Mr. Crandon's address was followed by the annual reports of the secretary-registrar, the treasurer, and the historian.

The secretary's report showed a membership on March 31, of 1,604, of whom 56 are life members. Also two Honorary members: Comte de Sahune Lafayette and Gaston de Sahune Lafayette of France, great-great grandsons of General Lafayette. Year by year the number of "actual sons" of the soldiers of the Revolutionary War dwindles: only four are left (John Adams died since the meeting.)

The treasurer's report is herewith given in full by vote of the Society. The historian read the names of 38 members who had died since the last annual meeting. Of the delegates chosen to represent the Society at the congress of the National Society at Chicago, May 19-20, 1913, the following-named attended: Dr. Moses Greeley Parker, John Graham Moseley, George H. Nutting, Franklin R. Gifford, Henry F. Punderson, Edward B. Coolidge and J. F. Whitney.

It was voted to refer to the board of managers Mr. D. S. Waterman's recommendation that the Society place memorial tablets in Roxbury to commemorate the distinguished services of Major-General William Heath and Brigadier-General John Greaton.

An incident of the meeting was the presence of Stephen B. Smith, of East Weymouth, aged 82 years, whose father, Enos Smith, served when a boy in 1781, on the state ship Protector, commanded by Captain John Foster Williams. A purse of about fifty-eight dollars was contributed by those present, and given to Mr. Smith.

The treasurer of the Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution has the honor to submit his twenty-first annual report, for the year ending April 15, 1913:

GENERAL INFORMATION AND MATTERS OF HISTORICAL INTEREST

SEAL

THE SEAL of the National Society is one and seven-eighths of an inch in diameter, and consists of the figure of a minute-man standing by the side of a plough, surrounded by thirteen stars; the whole encircled by a band three-eighths of an inch wide, upon which in raised letters is the name of the Society, with the date of organization. That of the State Society is identical with that of the National Society, except that within the name of the parent society is the motto "Massachusetts Society, organized April 19, 1889."

INSIGNIA

THE BADGE—Obverse: A gold cross of four arms and eight points, of the same size as the Chevalier's Cross of the French Legion of Honor, with white enamelled arms. In the centre is a gold medallion bust of George Washington in profile, surrounded by a ribbon in blue enamel, on which is the motto of the Society in gold letters, "Libertas et Patria." Between the medallion and the points of the cross is a laurel wreath. Reverse: Like the obverse; the medallion, however, has the figure of a minute-man, surrounded by a ribbon in blue enamel, containing in gold letters the words, "Sons of the American Revolution." The cross is surrounded by an eagle in gold, suspended by a silk ribbon of blue, white, and buff.

The cross is a reproduction of the emblem of the French Order of St. Louis, with certain changes, and was adopted to commemorate the assistance given to the Colonies by Louis XVI, Grand Master of that Order. The medallion, containing the head of Washington and the figure of the minute-man, is fitly placed upon a cross of such an origin and associations.

THE ROSETTE—The rosette is a button in the shape of a raised cup, of blue, white, and buff ribbon. It is to be worn in the upper left-hand button-hole of the coat.

The only badge now authorized by the National Congress is that described above, superseding all forms previously used. The price of the badge, or cross of St. Louis, adapted to this Society, is nine dollars. It may be obtained of Messrs. J. E. Caldwell & Co., Philadelphia, by permit issued by the Registrar-General, which will be furnished by the Registrar. The rosette may be procured of the Registrar for twenty-five cents.

THE OFFICIAL MARKER

The subject of identifying and marking the graves of Revolutionary soldiers and sailors has for some time engaged the attention of the Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

The General Court of Massachusetts, by an act passed in 1884, authorized towns to appropriate money for the purpose of erecting headstones or other monuments to the memory of the patriot dead.

The design adopted by the Massachusetts Society follows the insignia badge of the Society, having the letters S. A. R. (Soldier American Revolution) on three of the arms, and the figures 1775 on the fourth arm of the cross. More than nine thousand five hundred markers have been made and used throughout this and other States, and even in our distant possessions and in foreign lands. A list of soldiers and sailors whose graves have been designated was printed in connection with the Society's Year Books of 1901 and 1904.

The Massachusetts Society, while retaining the design of the marker as originally made of iron, has now entirely changed its material and mode of manufacture. The cross has been slightly reduced in size, and is made of good bronze. It is securely fastened to a brass rod, and this rod, with the cross, makes its entire length about thirty-seven inches. If desired, the end of the rod having an anchor may be set in cement, which is to be buried eighteen inches below the surface of the ground. This anchor will render the marker, when once adjusted, almost immovable; and, with the bronze and brass of which it is composed, the whole will last for many years. The National Congress, at its session in 1894, adopted the design for its official marker, and recommended its use by all the State Societies. At the session of 1903 the changes suggested by the Massachusetts Society were approved.

Full information for procuring the markers may be obtained from the Registrar.

Marble headstones, suitably inscribed for marking the graves of soldiers or sailors of the Revolution, are furnished free of charge upon application to the Quartermaster General, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

INFORMATION

MEMBERSHIP in this Society is strictly limited by the National and State Constitutions to such persons as can prove their descent from well-authenticated patriot Revolutionary ancestry. Collateral descent has at no time been allowed in this body by prescribed law or otherwise. Appropriate papers and all needed information for making application for admission will be furnished by the Registrar.

APPLICATIONS FOR MEMBERSHIP must be made out in duplicate; must be signed by the applicant on the second and fourth pages; must be sworn to before a justice or a notary; and returned to the Registrar with check for five dollars—which includes the admission fee and the first year's assessment. Biographical data should be given as fully as possible, and reference to authorities quoted. Care should be taken that all these requirements be carried out, as no imperfectly prepared papers can be received.

The Secretary of most of the States will make a search of the rolls and archives, and furnish an official certificate for a small sum. The Commissioner of Pensions at Washington will furnish a certificate, gratis, if the ancestor was a pensioner.

THE CERTIFICATE OF MEMBERSHIP issued by the National Society, handsomely engraved, and of size suitable for framing, will be furnished for the sum of one dollar in advance. Application to be made to the Registrar.

THE FRONTISPIECE

THE BATTLE OF BUNKER HILL

From a painting by Col. John Trumbull

“On the morning of June 16, 1775, positive and reliable information was brought to Cambridge from Boston during the previous night of the plans and decision of the British commanders for the occupation of Dorchester Heights on June 18. Immediate consultation took place at General Ward’s headquarters in Cambridge, when it was decided to occupy Charlestown Peninsula that night and force the British to attack us on June 17; the real objective, therefore, of the Battle of Bunker Hill was to prevent the execution of the British plan of occupying Dorchester Heights on June 18. After much argument this bold plan for precipitating a battle and making it as crippling as possible to the British was adopted, and Prescott was sent with about a thousand men to intrench himself on Charlestown Heights.

“The steepness of Bunker Hill on the western side made it impossible for our troops on the summit to depress their guns enough to prevent the British from seizing Charlestown Neck and thus capturing our forces on the summit of Bunker Hill. Hence the occupation of Breed’s Hill was a necessity, probably not unanticipated by our generals at Cambridge, as from that point the North End of Boston and the shipping could be commanded. The result of this bold move exactly corresponded to the purpose of fortifying Charlestown Heights. The British did accept the challenge and did suffer such a loss in carrying our position as proves the regulars’ marvellous courage and high discipline. Their total force engaged was about 2,640 men and officers, of which number 1,054 were killed or wounded, a proportion of average losses rarely recorded in any battle, while the whole right wing of Howe’s line, in front of the rail fence held by Stark and Putnam, was utterly and hopelessly routed.

“According to General Howe’s letter of June 22, 1775, still preserved, we now know that the entire British army in Boston on that day was not quite 5,500, of whom 1,450 were needed to garrison the town; this would leave 4,050 for offensive operations; of this 4,050,

2,640 were engaged in the battle; they lost 1,054, or 40 per cent, which was 26 per cent of the entire available field force on June 17. This loss so crippled the British army that they were thenceforth on the defensive and dared not risk another such battle for the possession of Dorchester Heights. This crippling of the British army was hoped for in challenging them to fight at Charlestown; our objective, which was to prevent them from occupying Dorchester Heights, was won and thus gained time for us to obtain the ordnance necessary to make our occupation of those heights effective in closing British sea communication and thus assuring their surrender or the evacuation of Boston, without damaging the town if we would not fire on them. Thus Bunker Hill is an historic battle and will continue to be so as years pass. Indeed, a critical study of the movements of that battle on both sides will well repay the military student, even though he may have taken part in the greatest battles of the Rebellion."—HORACE N. FISHER.

Addresses

THE PRESIDENT'S NEW YEAR'S GREETING

BOSTON, 1 January, 1913.

The President, to all Compatriots, gives most hearty New Year's Greeting, and seeks personally to say to each and all:

COMPATRIOTS:

We are at the parting of the ways. Your ideas and mine, those of our Fathers, as to what the word "Americanism" means, are not the ideas of many of our fellow citizens. A new conception of the body politic, of the popular participation in government of, for, and by the people, is in process of evolution. Economic beliefs and former standards are shattered; the very fabric of our American system is under review.

We confront problems, intensified by significant developments of the past year. The privilege of membership in our Society becomes more and more the opportunity to serve for American ideals. Can we not give our influence for maintenance of those conceptions of the Fathers which are foundation principles of the Republic, while conceding freely to the restless age and changing views on many phases of life and action of these strenuous times.

Less politics, more thoughtful study and appreciation of the value of our heritage, are needed. It is the part of wisdom that we understand what we believe. Each one of us should know more about the history of our country and should strive to apply such knowledge towards the good of our fellow men. There is solemn need of better understanding between older and younger Americans—descendants of the founders and those who, having accepted heartily our invitation, in these later days are bringing new blood, new ideas, new theories into America.

We can learn much from the new comers—frugality, love of the home—to get back to God's plan in family, and social and civic life; to practical and literal obedience to the Ten Commandments and the Golden Rule. We should be able to show what liberty under law means and that Americanism rests upon firm foundations, glorying in its past, living and working today, with perfect confidence in the future. We Americans, of all origins and descents, must get together and help each other, for the good of all. God has joined us together, the American people, and we have work to do in opposing efforts that would tear us apart.

Now, this means just this: "Get next" to the twentieth century American: we are dangerously near to forgetting that we've rolled by a dozen years of the new century—almost an eighth of it. Aren't we rather laying back on our oars and thinking nineteenth century thoughts in the most vital of all centuries, in our pride in eighteenth century achievements? Well, if that is so, we've got to "forget it" and "get next" to 1913, or it will get by us.

Now for a practical suggestion: Suppose the members and chapters engage in a systematic method of keeping the present generation better informed on the great events of American Revolutionary history, and as a step in that direction, so far as possible, observe in some general way, for the benefit of their respective communities, when convenient and consistent, certain especial dates. These observations may take the form of public meetings attended by all of the members of the Society in the immediate vicinity, with addresses and other forms of entertainment, respecting the American Revolution and its relation to the present. Certain anniversary days should be observed by the display of the National Flag.

The events and dates suggested as appropriate for observation are: January 1—Flag of the Colonies raised at Cambridge, 1776; February 22—Washington born, 1732; March 17—British evacuated Boston, 1776; April 19—Revolutionary War began, 1775, and Revolutionary army disbanded, 1783; May 6—Celebration at Valley Forge Camp of the announcement of French aid, 1778; June 14—United States flag created, 1777; June 17—Battle at Bunker Hill, 1775; July 4—Independence declared, 1776; August 16—Battle at Bennington, 1777; September 22—Nathan Hale executed, 1776; October 19—Yorktown surrendered, 1781; November 2—Washington's farewell to the army, 1783; December 16—France recognized the United States as an independent nation, 1782.

Membership in the Sons of the American Revolution is the acceptance of a solemn duty—to build into the structure of the American Republic the maintenance of true and enduring principles. Are we doing it, each and all of us? Let us try to build statelier mansions as this new year's swift seasons roll.

Fraternally,

EDWIN S. CRANDON, President.

NATIONAL SOCIETY'S CERTIFICATE OF MEMBERSHIP

HON. JAMES LOGAN'S ADDRESS AT WORCESTER,
OCTOBER 19, 1911

SONS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION:

I have prepared no lengthy address, as I was simply asked to give to our visitors a word of kindly greeting, which as Mayor of the City I am glad to do.

You come to no mean city for your outing today. Worcester is a city with a long and honorable record behind it, and any man might have a reasonable pride in being permitted to render service to such a city as Mayor. So today, while as Mayor I stand as the representative of the sons of many nations in this city, we are all at heart true Americans, remembering always that true Americanism has nothing to do with a man's ancestors or his place of birth.

The foundations of true Americanism are laid in lofty aspirations which have their source in the heart and conscience of the people, and we can heartily subscribe to the large thought to which our great Senator Hoar once gave expression when he said: "If every man of native birth were to die tonight, the men of foreign birth, who have come here to seek home and liberty under the shadow of the Republic, would carry on the government in God's own appointed way."

From all quarters of the globe we have gathered here in Massachusetts to make our homes. The blood of all the families of mankind mingle here in a national life-giving stream, which flows into the civic life of America, and while the great Father of us all ordained that among the nations of the earth the language of the lips should be different, he also ordained that the language of the heart should be the same.

Today, we hark back to that day in 1775 when your forefathers revolted against the tyranny of George the Third. How little that means to the millions who enjoy the blessings which your forefathers fought for, but how much it meant to them.

When they struck the blow for freedom, we were a feeble people scattered along the Atlantic Coast in widely separated settlements, a people with diverse interests and in no way homogenous, with different characteristics, customs and manners; but they all loved liberty, and loving it they were determined to possess it, even though to secure it they followed the path of glory to the grave.

For hundreds of years men had struggled blindly, sometimes confusedly, but always steadily upward toward that national freedom which makes liberty the bulwark of prosperity and the fountain of happiness, until that day in July, one hundred and thirty-five years ago, when upon this continent was founded a government based upon the rights of man.

The spirit of Bunker Hill was a part of the cargo that came over in the Mayflower. Since that day when the Mayflower landed her precious cargo at Plymouth, many vessels have entered our ports but none have brought anything more valuable than the ideals of liberty which came with those first sturdy pioneers. They laid the foundations upon which the United States have been built.

Bunker Hill made another George the Third impossible, and it also made possible the reign of Victoria the Good, and also the reign of that splendid disciple of peace, Edward VII. The free England of today would have been impossible without the separation of the colonies from the mother country. The hour had struck on the great clock which marks time and eternity and the world was ready for the cultivation of the ideals of liberty. But that was not a growth that sprang into existence in 1776. Oh, no, it was then that the flower bloomed, but the seed had been planted long years before, and the roots had taken firm hold in fertile soil.

George the Third, as other monarchs had done for thousands of years, tried to rule by the sword, and relied upon the sword to make his will effective, but a better day was dawning when the ruler of a great nation would rule through the heart and conscience of his people, and as a result the institutions of our mother country have been growing more and more democratic and the position of her monarch has been made more and more secure.

The tree of liberty has been nurtured by the blood of the British people, and when I use those words I use them in no contracted sense. Were there to be cut from the tree of liberty those branches which have been grafted into it by the British people and their descendants, grafts that have been bought with the blood of her noblest sons—were those branches to be cut off, the tree of liberty would shrink to an insignificant shrub.

Democratic Great Britain is the rich fruitage of the planting on Bunker Hill, one hundred and thirty-six years ago, and the memories and traditions of that struggle on the heights of Bunker Hill which ended in a defeat, but which defeat wore the mantle of glory is now the priceless heritage of honor for both the mother country and our own, and all the sons and daughters of both countries have a right to their share in the glory which is ours.

But what a splendid foe your forefathers had to fight! General

Howe, who on the Heights of Quebec sixteen years before had stood with twenty-four others in a forlorn hope, was more alone at Bunker Hill, where every one of the twelve officers on his staff was either killed or wounded. He promised his men not to send them where he could not go himself and nobly did he keep his promise. Three times inside of an hour and a half he led the British storming column at a cost of 224 killed and 830 wounded, and of the killed and wounded 157 were officers. It was from just such stock as this that your forefathers sprung. In one of General Howe's companies every man was killed or wounded. The price our fathers paid for us on that day was 150 killed and 270 wounded, and this price was willingly paid that you and I might have the priceless heritage of freedom. The men who defended and the men who stormed the heights of Bunker Hill were of the same material out of which could be built the two leading nations of the world.

As the years went on and the nation expanded, New England gave her sons to settle the fertile fields of the West. They went there to take up the rich farming land, but in a larger way they went for another purpose, not known or appreciated then. In the providence of God they went with the spirit of Bunker Hill to hold that great empire of the West against the assaults of slavery, so that when in the fullness of time the cause of freedom needed defenders in the West, the seed from old New England had taken deep root and kept the great Southwest forever free.

The United States has rendered an incalculable service to humanity by merely living and thriving for the last one hundred and thirty-five years. We have kept steadily on our course and have held to that form of government which in every age has been the ideal and hope of every generous soul. We have found our form of government sufficient for all purposes, for peace, order, education, for the acquisition of wealth and the security of property, for strength to withstand the shock of battle and for clemency after the triumph of Civil War. True we have a written constitution, but this government of ours does not depend on the thoughts of man committed to paper, but upon those eternal principles implanted in the heart of man by Almighty God.

WASHINGTON, THE GREAT AMERICAN

By REV. DR. DANIEL DULANY ADDISON

Address delivered at the Hotel Vendome, February 22, 1913

GENTLEMEN, DESCENDANTS OF HEROES OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION:

I like to feel that I have a personal justification in appearing here today to speak to you on this subject. As your President has indicated, I am a Virginian by birth, a resident of the city of Washington until I came to Massachusetts, and a member of the church that George Washington served so long as a member of the vestry, but further than that it interests me, without going into personal matters, to recall, as every patriot must be thrilled by such memories, that my great, great-grandfather was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence (applause), and that another ancestor of mine, the Rev. Walter Dulany Addison, lived at Oxon Hill, on the Potomac River, almost across from Mount Vernon. The intercourse between the Washington family and the Addison family at Oxon Hill was very close and intimate, so much so that when General Washington died this clergyman of our church that I am speaking of, the Rev. Walter Dulany Addison, was one of the clergymen who officiated at his funeral. These are personal thoughts, but they make one, as I say, thrill to recall that your representative and my representative in that period responded as men of action to the need of the time. In other words, you and I are as near those great events represented by our ancestors as we possibly could be, and we like to feel that if we ourselves had been there in those days we should have responded as they responded. Let us lay that to our souls and feel that we should have so given our interest and our life for the great cause.

Henry Cabot Lodge, in his very remarkable life of Washington, says that on the 9th of February in the year 1800 there was a great military display in the city of Paris. They were celebrating the successes of the Egyptian expedition, and the flower of the French soldiers were there on the Champs de Mars in their glitter and their pomp, and every flag was draped in black. He said that on the same day on the victorious squadrons of the English navy in the English Channel every flag was at half mast. Why? Because the news had come to them that George Washington had died. France honored him in the midst of her own rejoicing and victories, and the English fleet, representing the nation from which he had wrested an empire, also honored him. This means that they recognized that one of the great creative souls of human history had passed away.

In studying his life, we must put aside the mythical Washington or the one that has grown up through tradition, and think of him as a man who developed, not rapidly, but through the circumstances of his career, always responding to those calls that came to him. A boy in the old Dominion of Virginia, reared in a family of refinement, with traditions of manhood, living in the country, enjoying all those sports and avocations of the country life which give good health, strong constitution, and a manly outlook on the world, his education was very humble. He was taught to read by the parish sexton, and what little learning he gained in his youth, or childhood rather, was through the minister and his mother and the few relatives who took interest enough in him to assist in his training. But the greatest factor in his growing manhood was Lord Fairfax, a man of refinement and education, who had seen a great deal of the courts of Europe and who soon learned to love young Washington, talking to him about important affairs and helping him to decide what he should do. He found an apt pupil; for this we know from the diaries written by Washington as a boy, containing the wonderful list of directions and rules for the government of his life, which in many respects are equal to those Lord Chesterfield gave to his son. One, for instance, I recall, where he said: "Let me ever keep burning in my heart that spark of celestial fire called conscience." This was the boy who had a fine purpose from the very start. He did not know exactly what was to be his business, but finally, through Lord Fairfax, who desired to have him survey properties that he owned, he took up the work of a surveyor. This led him far afield in the wilderness. And the remarkable fact is that the surveying by George Washington is permanent and authoritative today, showing with what accuracy and care he entered into every work that he undertook.

This surveying led him out into the West, where he learned to know Indian and pioneer life. He sat beside the camp fire and prepared himself to be the pioneer scout and soldier that he afterwards became. With difficulties in the way, he performed this work admirably. His military interest naturally arose from the fact that the French and Indians were making encroachments on the West. He was soon sent out with a small expedition in that direction; and it was at that time that he first really sprang into national fame. It was rather remarkable that a man in his early twenties should suddenly find himself famous throughout the world. The reason was that at the Great Meadows he met a French force greater than his own. He engaged in battle; and a leading French officer was killed in that action. The only member who escaped to Canada afterwards told, and it was known in Paris and England and elsewhere, that a man by the name of Washington had met a French force and had overcome them. He was called an assassin in those days, but they little knew that he so organized his slight force that he was able to overcome the enemy. This prepared him, of course, for his next great interest.

When Braddock came to our country to push back the French and the Indians, there was no one in Virginia who had had the same pioneer experience in scouting as Washington, so naturally he was attached to Braddock. We remember the story of how he advised Braddock about methods of fighting in the wilderness; but he could not impress upon him the fact that he must not go with his flags flying and his drums beating as he would on the field of battle in Europe or on some parade ground. Of course, the Indians ambushed them and they were overcome. But the one figure that stood out in Braddock's defeat was young Washington, who organized the disordered companies and saved many of them by the heroism of his own personality; and it is the irony of history that the man whose advice was rejected by General Braddock was the man who read the burial service over the grave of the English general.

In understanding Washington's life we can divide it into three periods: the first period up to the time of the breaking out of the American Revolution; then the period of the war; and then the period after the war, the great constructive epoch in our history. I have traced rapidly the life of Washington up to Braddock's defeat. From that time to the outbreak of the war he was alive to all problems of the young colonists. He had made up his mind, as is shown by his letters, that the time was coming when we should have to struggle against the English government, and also perhaps in the dim future to have our independence. He was a member of the vestry. He was the lieutenant-colonel of the forces in Virginia. In fact, just before the outbreak of the American Revolution he was by all odds the first soldier in the land, for he had had experience among the Indians and French pioneers; he had had experience with the trained troops of Europe. He had watched them carefully—their methods of drill and their system. When the call came, the country turned to the one man who could help them. He was equipped so well that instantly they thought of him, and Congress elected him to be the commander-in-chief of the American forces.

There was one incident in the House of Burgesses that is of great interest. We speak of him as a silent man. He was. He kept his own counsel. No one could tell what was working in his mind. He never spoke of himself, only he spoke through his acts. As an old motto on a family coat-of-arms that I recently saw reads, "Let the deed show." But he did make one speech in the House of Burgesses, and it was the most eloquent speech made on the occasion. He rose and said, "I at my own charges will take a thousand men to the help of the men in Boston," and he sat down. That was all, but it was enough. It showed his spirit. (Applause.)

When he came to Boston to take command of the American forces he was dealing with numbers of men that he had never met before, under conditions that were strange, and yet by his adaptation, and dignity, and knowledge of character, he was able to weld these forces into an effective group of men and soldiers. As he said himself afterwards, he considered that it was one of the most remarkable pieces of work that any general had ever been called upon to perform. Here in Boston were fifty-five hundred English troops, and with his raw recruits without any powder he kept them at bay. By placing his guns on Dorchester Heights, without practically striking a blow in battle, he won the first great victory of the American Revolution. The English troops evacuated Boston; and Boston attained her liberty. Never again were the English soldiers there with power during the whole Revolution. This initial stroke was a stroke of genius. Without great bloodshed he was able to free the city of Boston from the enemy. (Applause.)

Then on to New York, with the great defeat. And let us say here that Washington was in some respects greater in defeat than in victory, because he knew how to handle the defeat. He never was overwhelmed with any sense of melancholy; he never for an instant lost faith in himself or his cause. He used his defeat for further victories. After the campaigns about New York he was constantly driven back. The English soldiers were rejoicing in their victories, and they thought the American Revolution was over, but Washington, driven into New Jersey, crossed the Delaware, and struck that marvellous blow at Trenton, then at Princeton and at Germantown though a defeat there, but he showed that he was still alive. As some who have analyzed his military purposes have said, Washington did not attempt to meet the British forces on the field in great battles, but he desired, whatever his defeats might be, to keep an army in the field, and as long as he kept an army in the field, wherever that army might be, the Revolution would go on, and if he could continue it long enough there would be success to the American cause. When he struck detachments here and there, as he did at Trenton and at Princeton, it was to show that he was still in the field. He could let the English have one or two cities, or a dozen cities, on the seaboard, if they stayed there. As you remember, Benjamin Franklin said in Paris when he heard that the English troops had taken Philadelphia, "Why, yes, that is excellent, because Philadelphia has taken them." Let them have Philadelphia and New York, but as long as the American soldiers were in the field and could maintain themselves the Revolution would go on.

And this was the reason that during the time of Valley Forge, the lowest ebb of the American cause, when Congress through stupidity and through lack of power was not able to give the money and the men that were needed, and enlistments were such that a new army had to be created almost every six months, Washington out of his own purse, and by writing constant letters to his friends and representatives in Congress, desired to have his soldiers there so they might simply be in the field standing guard. If it had taken ten or fifteen years, General Washington and the men who felt like him would have still been in the army working for the success of their cause, because they were determined; they had great convictions; they were not only defending their homes, but a few of them, like Washington, were trying to lay the foundations of a great nation, a great empire. There were not many of those men of large vision. It was the foresight of Washington which made him realize what the future of this country might be. Alexander Hamilton was one who had the larger thought, but he was not born in this land. Among all the colonists, who had lived rather a local, circumscribed life, Washington was the one who had the sense to feel the greatness of the empire which was to be founded here. He was determined that he would give his property, his fortune, his life, everything, for that cause.

As a military genius, he showed his great power in thus using his defeats for further victories and always maintaining an army in the field at every cost. Oh, what was the joy in his heart when he heard that the English troops were going down to Philadelphia! Was he to interfere with their taking that city? No. Why? And here comes in the largest strategy of the war. He had learned that an army was coming by way of Canada down to attack us from the north, and his (Washington's) fear was that the British army in New York would march up the Hudson and join the British army coming from the north and so divide the northern colonies from the southern colonies. This, indeed, might have been the destruction of the American cause. But Washington had written to Congress and to officers to have a force go quietly up to the north to meet the British army. If he had seen that the English troops around New York were going up towards Albany, then he would have had to fight in the rear, but he would have fought what he considered a losing cause, so he rejoiced in his soul when he heard that they were going down to Philadelphia. He knew that the farmers would rise up around Albany and Saratoga and take care of that army by themselves, as they did when the elite of the English troops, headed by Burgoyne, surrendered to the American farmers at Saratoga.

Then other battles came when the allies helped and when the cause was practically won. After the victory and when peace was established, we find again that Washington was the one man who saw the weakness of our federation, and worked harder than any of the others for the establishment of the American union. He believed in a strong centralized government, that the national government should have a power greater than that of the states, that it should be able to weld these several colonies into a strong nation. And how great his prescience was! when we know today that it took a great war to emphasize the thought of the federal authority, and that we have not as yet the federal government as strong as it ought to be. The only way in which you and I practically through our daily lives ever come in touch with the centralized American government is through the postoffice and the postman who comes to our door. We have yet to fight out on a larger scale those problems of the centralized government in our land, and when we do we shall be carrying out the desire and the will of Washington and Hamilton and those other great spirits among our forefathers—the American union, the government of the people.

Washington saw, when he refused a crown, that this must be a republic. He believed that no men were great enough to govern others without their consent, as Lincoln said, and he laid firmly those foundations which have made us the land of the free and the land where the people rule. If in the midst of our modern political conditions and strange theories of government, we may have to change some of our constitutional methods, it will always be in the direction of greater authority lodged in the hands of the people; and when the people are educated and learn their power, when they combine for high purposes, there is no authority or power in this land that can withstand them. When the evils have grown so great that the people rise in their might and say they must be controlled and destroyed they will be controlled and destroyed. (Applause.)

Whether it is by a form of representative government, by checks and balances, as we inherited it from the past, or whether it is to be by the more direct expression of the will of the people, we are in an evolutionary stage which is bringing to us nearer the great open doors of the new civilization, the civilization which will be based upon patriotism and justice and righteousness, and that evolution has come directly from that which Washington and our patriots in those days started, the foundations they laid. The structure is to be built upon that. We are not in a static condition, of course; government never is. We have to reinterpret old constitutions; we have to establish new methods. But let us always remember that if you can trust the people, as Washington trusted them, as Lincoln trusted them, then our problems will be solved in a judicial, in a patriotic and a righteous way. That is simply our confidence in the human soul when it is given its freedom and when there are no outside obstacles to control it and no pressure brought to bear upon it from artificial laws or influences that have been operative in past times. Democracy in its essence simply means a confidence in the human soul; if we cannot have confidence in the human soul, why, then in a certain sense we cannot have confidence in the God who created the human soul. The philosophy underlying our American institutions is the conviction that the human soul has in it a divine element, and when it is given the opportunity and the training it will be able to express itself according to the will of God.

These were the underlying ideas in the mind of General Washington as we find them in his letters, his vast correspondence, and in some of his speeches as President of the United States. And furthermore, he established a land here, and he knew that he was so establishing it, in which opportunity is given for every talent and ability that man possesses. There are no artificial chains that bind genius here. The boy from the slums or the boy from the Back Bay equally has his chance. America is the place for the manufacture of many noble things, but the greatest manufacture of all is the manufacture of character. We are here producing opportunities for men of character who can make their way to the highest positions in the land. While we, members of this organization, members of other patriotic organizations, love to refer to our ancestors and to remember what they have done, yet we also recall that, as Napoleon once said, "I am an ancestor." So men rise up today and become an ancestor, and we honor them, and we say that it is an example of what this land of ours can do and what it is ready to give to every individual who has ability, a chance to express that ability and to make a permanent place for himself in our land.

So we have rapidly sketched the life of one of our great heroes, we have tried to put our finger here and there on his genius and what he stood for. If we are true American patriots we shall not only honor Washington by our veneration and applause, but we shall do our best to stand guard and to see that those principles which he established shall become more generally extended, that his wisdom shall be incorporated in any new instruments or methods of government that we may adopt, and that his graciousness and kindness and brotherliness shall come to our aid as we try to assimilate the great numbers of strangers who come to our shores from foreign lands, lands that are far removed from Anglo Saxon tradition. We shall never go far wrong if we have a confidence in the human soul; if we believe that men are the children of God, and as children of God we shall be worthy members of the new civilization which is to come and develop out of that which has been laid by the forefathers whom we honor today. (Great applause.)

LEXINGTON-CONCORD-BUNKER HILL

The British Soldiers' Side

ADDRESS BY BRIG. GEN. PHILIP READE, U. S. ARMY (RETIRED)
BEFORE THE MASSACHUSETTS SOCIETY; SONS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

King George III set himself, his ministers, Parliament and all Great Britain to subdue to his will one stubborn town on the sterile coast of Massachusetts Bay.

Gen. Thomas Gage had been appointed commander-in-chief of the British forces in the colonies, was made governor, and four additional regiments of soldiers with proper artillery were sent to Boston to support him in his arbitrary measures, reinforcing those sent in 1767, to overawe sixteen thousand people of European origin, all of whom learned to read and write. Among these people were Samuel Adams, John Hancock, James Warren, James Bowdoin, John Adams, James Otis, Joseph Hawley, Josiah Quincy, Henry Knox and Paul Revere.

The Royalist soldiers landed at Long Wharf Boston, October 1st, 1768, and remained until March 17th, 1776.

Thirty-six days after the Lexington-Concord affair, Sir William Howe, Sir Henry Clinton, and Sir John Burgoyne with reinforcements increased the strength of the Boston garrison to nearly ten thousand men. On Lexington Day he had four thousand men, but Gage did not disparage the character of the Colonists. In November, 1774, he made this appeal to the British Government: He "was confident that to begin with an army of 20,000 men would, in the end, save Great Britain both blood and treasure" and declared "Neither twenty, forty nor sixty thousand can end the dawning struggle." This prophecy was echoed by Col. George Washington: Said the latter to Capt. Robert Mackenzie, of his old regiment, who intimated that Massachusetts was rebellious, and sought independence:—"Unequivocally, if the ministry are determined to push matters to extremity, I add, as my opinion, that more blood will be spilled than history has ever furnished instances of, in the annals of North America; and such vital wound will be given to the peace of this great country, as time itself cannot cure, or eradicate the remembrance of." Washington and Gage had served together, twenty years before, and until the Lexington affair, had been friendly correspondents. It will be seen, therefore, that the full significance and intensity of the patriotic ferment, and its results to the British crown, after the stern arbitrament of war, was appreciated by General Gage, and Washington, and we may also add the names of Lord Chatham, Lord Dartmouth, Lord Effingham, Admiral Keppel, and Granville Sharpe.

Gage and Washington were also in accord in another respect. Each regarded the military occupation of Boston, where the revolutionary sentiment was as pronounced as in Alamance, N. C., and the population more dense as well as more enlightened, to be a grave military, as well as political, error.

Perhaps during the midsummer of 1775, the beleagured city of Boston astonished by the stolid and bloody resistance to its guardian garrison, contained no person less astonished than Thomas Gage, its soldier commander, who, however, was loyal to his king,—loyalty, perhaps, not entirely shared by Mrs. Gage, who was a New Yorker.

Frederick the Great and Washington were reticent soldiers. The Prussian declared that "if he suspected that his nightcap would betray his thoughts, while he slept, he would burn it." Gage's secrets, however, were not like Washington's; some of them were "furnished with wings" and the patriots were kept advised of the plans of the Royalist commander. The British in Boston fared badly. Food was scarce and poor. It was "pork and beans one day, beans and pork another." Even in Gage's household fresh meat was seldom to be seen. Putnam, knowing their strait, sent Gage's wife "a fine quarter of veal," for which he received "a very polite card of thanks."

When Washington assumed command of the Continental Army at Cambridge (July 3rd, 1775) the yeomanry of New England had, since Lexington Day, firmly grasped all approaches to the city of Boston. This pressure was now and then resisted by efforts of the garrison to secure supplies from the surrounding country farms, but gradually the country excursions of the troops were restricted within the range of their town guns. Bullocks, flour and other provisions were needed. Boston was surrounded by nearly twenty thousand minute-men. These minute-men made persistent pressure upon every artery through which food could flow to relieve the hungry garrison within the British lines. Ordinary provisions had become abundant in the Continental Army. The adjacent country fed them.

General Gage set the example in seizing military stores. His orders required him to do so. Respecting the attempted seizure of arms in the hands of the people, that precipitated the "skirmish," as the British defined it, which occurred at Lexington on April 19, 1775. Lord Dartmouth said "The effect of Gen. Gage's attempt at Concord will be fatal." King George III called him "The Mild General." Gage went back to England in October, 1776, and Howe was left in command of the forces in Boston.

General Gage, April 29, 1775, sent to Governor Trumbull a narrative, entitled "A circumstantial Account of an Attack that happened on the 19th of April, 1775, on His Majesty's Troops, by a Number of the People of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay." This was also circulated in a handbill and is printed in the Massachusetts Historical Collections, Vol. II, with the exception of the last paragraph, which is as follows: "Thus this unfortunate affair has happened through the rashness and imprudence of a few people who began firing on the troops at Lexington."

Gage's predecessor in Boston, the scholarly Lt. Gov. Thomas Hutchinson, was a Boston man, the trend of whose mind resembled William Bradford's and John Winthrop's,—he had, too, the courage of his convictions,—but after May 13, 1774, Boston had, in Gage, as governor, not a historian, but a soldier who had exhibited gallantry in Braddock's time and who had been commissioned "to observe and follow such orders and directions from time to time as he shall receive from His Majesty, the King, or the superior officers set over him, according to the rules and discipline of war." The view that he took of men and things about him was necessarily that of a soldier.

The king had ordered that the town of Boston be placed immediately under military rule, so red coats were everywhere to be seen, on the Common, on King Street, in the Town House, in Faneuil Hall and the Old South Meeting House.

In 1769, Parliament requested the king to "instruct the Gov. of Mass. to forward to England for trial, upon charges of high treason" several prominent citizens of that colony, "who had been guilty of denouncing Parliamentary action."

The orders of his sovereign compelled Gage to use military force to vindicate and execute authority,—that is what his troops were there for.

The English sovereign ordered him to "seize all arms and powder." An act of Parliament forbade the exportation of arms to the Colonies. Thus by royal decree and Parliamentary Act, Gage's duty was to send Colonel Leslie February 26, 1775 with three hundred of the king's troops from Castle Island to Salem to capture a number of cannon secreted there. This affair was bloodless and the Colonists saved their cannon, but the episode at Salem North Bridge marked the first armed resistance to the measures of the king's troops. Gage learned that the Committee of the Provincial Congress had caused military stores to be deposited at Concord and Worcester. He turned his attention to Concord. His soldiers captured powder stored in the old mill not far from the hill on which Tufts College now stands, and, on the same day, they carried off two field-pieces from Cambridge.

Vol. IV, 2nd series of the Massachusetts Historical Collections gives the instructions of Lieutenant-General Gage to his scouts, Capt. Brown, 52nd Regiment and Ensign D'Berniére, 10th Regiment, on Feb. 22, 1775, regarding contraband munitions of war that were being gathered for Provincial uses against the king's troops.*

The execution of the Boston Port Bill devolved on Gen. Thos. Gage. His manners were pleasing. He entered upon his duties with a large measure of popularity. His letters, his orders, his trials, his experiences, display the diversities between civilians and military men. Gage has been measured and recorded by non-military men.

His instructions required him to compel "a full and absolute submission" to the rigorous laws of Parliament; and to this end he was, if it should be considered necessary, authorized to employ with effect the king's troops. This was a harsh duty to perform, but the ministry resolved to subdue Massachusetts by arms.

The letters of Lord Dartmouth and General Gage, or extracts from them, were published in the Parliamentary Register, of 1775.

The Earl of Dartmouth, in a letter to Governor Gage, dated April 9, 1774, after urging the duty of "mild and gentle persuasion," says: "at the same time, the sovereignty of the king, in this Parliament, over the Colonies, requires a full and absolute submission; and his majesty's dignity demands, that until that submission be made, the town of Boston, where so much anarchy and confusion have prevailed, should cease to be the place of residence of his governor, or of any other officer of Government who is not obliged by law to perform his functions there." After dwelling on the "criminality" of those who aided in the proceedings in Boston during the months of November and December, 1773, the letter says: "The king considers the punishment of these offenders as a very necessary and essential example to others of the ill consequences that must follow from such open and arbitrary usurpations as tend to the subversion of all government, etc." The instructions of the Treasury Board, dated March 31, were equally rigorous, and looked to a complete prostration of the commerce of Boston.

Copies of these Regulating Acts were received early in June, and were immediately circulated through the colonies. General Gage did not receive them officially until the 6th of August, and with them a letter of instructions from the government. Lord Dartmouth hoped these new laws would have "the good effect" to give vigor to the civil authority, and instructed the governor at all hazards to put them in force.

A meeting of delegates from committees of the counties of Worcester, Essex, and Middlesex was held on 26th of August, 1774, at Faneuil Hall. The governor, meantime, kept a watchful eye on these movements. He resolved to use his troops to disperse public meetings and to protect the courts; and made his first attempt at Salem. A meeting was called in this town, August 20, by printed handbills from the committee of correspondence. On the 23rd of August, General Gage issued a proclamation, forbidding all persons to attend this meeting, "or any other not warranted by law" as they would be chargeable with all the ill consequences that might follow and must "answer for them at their utmost peril." The inhabitants, however, assembled on the 24th, according to the notice. By request, the committee waited on General Gage, who ordered them to dissolve the meeting. The committee began to argue the legality of the assembly. "I came to execute the laws not to dispute them," replied Gage. A detachment of troops was ordered to disperse the meeting; but while the committee were in consultation, the people transacted their business and adjourned, and the discomfited governor gratified his resentment by arresting those who called the unlawful assembly. On June 24th, General Gage issued a proclamation against the Solemn League and Covenant.

The next attempt of General Gage indicated his intention to secure the cannon and powder of the province, and thus disarm the people. Under the sanction and direction of members of the committees of correspondence of Boston, Charlestown and Cambridge, the people repaired in a body to the residence of Lieutenant-Governor Oliver, and obliged him to resign his office. The resignation of other important officers, who had accepted appointments or executed processes, was "procured." General Gage was advised by his adherents not to use force to disperse this meeting, and thus, unmolested, it acted in a revolutionary manner almost within gun-shot of his batteries. "The flames of sedition," he writes, September 2, "had spread universally throughout the country beyond conception," and he assured Lord Dartmouth that "civil government was near its end" that the time for "conciliation, moderation, reasoning, was over;" and that nothing could be done but by forcible means; that Connecticut and Rhode Island were as furious as Massachusetts; that the only thing to be done was to secure the friends of the government in Boston; to reinforce the troops and act as circumstances might require. "I mean, my lord," he adds, "to secure all I can by degrees, to avoid any bloody crisis as long as possible, unless forced into it by themselves, which may happen." But as it was resolved "to stem the torrent, not to yield to it" he frankly told the minister "that a very respectable force should take the field."

This was the period of transition from moral suasion to physical force. General Gage saw no hope of procuring obedience but by the power of arms; and the patriot party saw no safety in anything short of military preparation. Resistance to the acts continued to be manifested in every form. On the 9th of September the memorable Suffolk resolves were adopted, going to the same length with those of Middlesex; and these were succeeded by others in other counties equally bold and spirited. These resolves were approved by the Continental Congress, then in session. Everywhere the people either compelled the unconstitutional officers to resign, or opposed every attempt to exercise authority, whether by the Governor or by a constable. They also made every effort to transport ammunition and stores to places of security. Cannon and muskets were carried secretly out of Boston. The guns were taken from an old battery at Charlestown, where the Navy Yard is. This was difficult to accomplish, for any unusual noise in the battery might be heard on board a ship of war which lay opposite to it. But a party of patriots, mostly of Charlestown, removed the guns silently at night, secreted them in the town for a few days, and eluding a strict search made for them by British officers, carried them into the country.

General Gage immediately began to fortify Boston Neck. This added intensity to the excitement. The inhabitants became alarmed at so ominous a movement; and, on the 5th of September, the selectmen waited on General Gage, represented the public feeling, and requested him to explain his object. The governor stated in reply, that his object was to protect his majesty's troops and his majesty's subjects; and that he had no intention to stop up any avenue, or to obstruct the free passage over it, or to do anything hostile against the inhabitants. He went on with the works and soon mounted on them two twenty-four pounders and eight nine pounders. Again, on the 9th, the selectmen called on him, and represented the growing apprehension of the inhabitants. The fortress, at the entrance of the town, they said, indicated a design to reduce the metropolis to the state of a garrison. In a written reply, General Gage repeated his former assurances, and characteristically remarked, that it was his duty, so it should be his endeavor, to preserve the peace and promote the happiness of every individual, and recommend the inhabitants to cultivate the same spirit. On the next day a committee from the Suffolk convention waited on him. They represented that the prevailing ferment was caused by his seizing the powder at Charlestown, by his withholding the stock in the Boston magazine from its legal proprietors, by his new fortification, and by the insults of his troops to the people. General Gage's reply is dated September 12. He admits instances of disorder in the troops, but appeals to their general good behavior, and concludes, "I would ask what occasion there is for such numbers going armed in and out of town and through the country in a hostile manner? Or why were the guns removed privately in the night from the battery in Charlestown? The refusing submission to the late acts of Parliament I find general throughout the province, and I shall lay the same before his majesty." The patriots were never at a loss for words, and on receiving this, they promptly presented an address to the governor, recapitulating his hostile acts, and requesting him, in his purposed representation, to assure his majesty, "That no wish of independency, no adverse sentiments or designs toward his majesty or his troops now here, actuate his good subjects in this colony; but that their sole intention is to preserve pure and inviolate those rights to which, as men, and English Americans, they are justly entitled, and which have been guaranteed to them by his majesty's royal predecessors." Dr. Joseph Warren, in presenting this address to General Gage, remarked, "That no person had, so far as he had been informed, taken any steps that indicated any hostile intention, until the seizing and carrying off the powder from the magazine in the County of Middlesex."

The General Congress remonstrated on these fortifications. General Gage, October 20, in his reply, grimly says: "Two works of earth have been raised at some distance from the town, wide of the road, and guns put in them. The remains of old works, going out of the town, have been strengthened and guns placed there likewise."

General Gage, August 27, 1774, wrote to Lord Dartmouth—"It is agreed that popular fury was never greater in this province than at present, and it has taken its rise from the old source at Boston, though it has appeared first at a distance. Those demagogues trust their safety in the long forbearance of government, and an assurance that they cannot be punished. They chicane, elude, openly violate, or passively resist the laws, as opportunity serves; and opposition to authority is of so long standing, that it has become habitual."

"The people," Tudor well remarks, "were the subjects of a distant monarch, but royalty was merely in theory with them."

Governor Gage summoned the selectmen to meet at the Province House, August 13, when he abruptly handed them the clause about town-meetings, and read it to them. The selectmen replied that the provincial law would be the rule of their conduct, when the governor stated that he was determined to enforce the act of Parliament and that they must be answerable for any bad consequences.

Governor Gage summoned the selectmen to the Province House to tell them that he should enforce the act. The selectmen remarked that they should be governed by the law of the province (i. e., not the king). Meetings called before the first of August were kept alive for weeks and months; and they might be kept alive, remarked Gage, for years. The governor and his advisors were puzzled; dared not order the troops to stop them, or forebore to do so,—and, to their infinite annoyance, the patriots continued to thunder in the forum. The people flocked in crowds to Faneuil Hall, a place redolent with the blossoming of young America. When this overflowed, the resort was to the Old South Church, which hence has not inaptly been called the "Sanctuary of Freedom." But in case an obnoxious office was to be resigned, or a patriotic agreement was to be entered into, or a public measure was to be lampooned, the concourse flocked to Liberty Tree, where, agreeably to previous notice, the invisible genius of the place had displayed the satirical emblems, or procured table, paper and pens. It was a fine large old elm, near the corner of Washington and Essex Street. A staff ran through it, reaching above it, on which a flag was displayed, and an inscription was put on it, stating that it was pruned by order of the Sons of Liberty in 1766. All processions saluted it as an emblem of the popular cause. No wonder it put the royal governors in mind of Jack Cade's Oak of Reformation.

General Gage, September 2, writes of this clause in the act "No persons I have advised with can tell what to do with it."

Boston was literally full of clubs and caucuses, which were used with great effect to secure unity of action.

The six newspapers printed in Boston in 1774 were as follows: The Boston Evening Post, The Boston News-Letter, Massachusetts Gazette, Boston Post-Boy and Advertiser, Boston Gazette and Country Journal, and The Massachusetts Spy.

"A number of the better sort of people," General Gage writes, July 5, "attended town-meeting in Boston with a design to make a push to pay for the tea, and annihilate the committee of correspondence, but they were outvoted by a great number of the lower class."

The destruction of the tea belonging to Mr. Francis Rotch was defended as a measure of "political necessity." The phrase "military necessity" is an equally elastic term. All soldiers know the forceful significance of the words "military necessity."

From the letters of the period Josiah Quincy, Jr., writes to us, "To prepare for the worst, for it is a serious truth, in which our friends there are all agreed, that our countrymen must seal their cause with their blood. Our old Louisburg soldiers laugh at the newly erected fortifications of Gage, and say they are mud walls in comparison with what they have subdued; and that, if necessary, they would regard them no more than a beaver dam."

John Adams says that the great Virginia orator, Patrick Henry, on being told that it was Major Hawley's opinion that "We must fight, and make preparation for it," solemnly averred, "I am of that man's mind." Such phrases are no mere words. Then they were things. They heralded the coming of that terrible calamity, civil war.

All eyes then were fixed on Boston; and, until its evacuation, it was regarded with intense interest and, at times, with apprehension. A hostile fleet surrounded it without, a formidable military were assembling within, tents covered its fields, cannon were planted on its eminences, and troops daily paraded in its streets. It wore the aspect, and became subject to the vexations, of a garrisoned town.

General Gage, his crown-appointed councillors, and the official functionaries, were obliged to live in a town in which the dignity of his majesty prescribed that not one of them should reside. This was Dartmouth's order of April 9th, 1774. On September 20th, 1774, Governor Gage wrote: "The factionists have some warm friends in N. Y. and Philadelphia; the people of Charleston, S. C., are as mad as they are here." On September 25th, General Gage writes: "The disease is not confined to Boston: it is universal, — there is no knowing where to apply a remedy." In "The American Revolution," Part 1, page 285, Sir George Otto Trevelyan says: "Gage had been confidentially instructed by the King to 'insinuate to New York and such other colonies as were not guided by the madness of the times,' proposals which might entice them back to due obedience without putting 'the dagger to their throats.' The quoted words are found in letter from George the third to Dartmouth: Jan. 31, 1775."

On October 26th, 1774, a Massachusetts Provincial Congress adopted a plan for organizing the militia, maintaining it, and calling it out when circumstances should render it necessary. An executive authority,—the Committee of Safety,—was created, clothed with large discretionary powers; and another called the Committee of Supplies. On the 27th, Artemus Ward and Seth Pomeroy were chosen general officers. Among the energetic acts of this memorable Congress was one authorizing the collection of military stores. In November, the Committee authorized the purchase of materials for an army, and ordered them to be deposited at Concord and Worcester. These proceedings were denounced by General Gage, in a proclamation dated November 10th, as treasonable, and a compliance with them was forbidden. In a short time the king's speech and the action of Parliament were received, which manifested a firm determination to produce submission to the late Acts, and to maintain "the supreme authority" of Great Britain over the colonies. However, a second Provincial Congress (Feb. 1 to 16, 1775) renewed the measures of its predecessor, and gave definiteness to the duties of the Committee of Safety by "empowering and directing" them (February 9th) to assemble the militia whenever it was required to resist the execution of the two acts. Two additional generals, John Thomas and William Heath, were appointed. It was made the duty of the five general officers to take charge of the militia when called out by the Committee of Safety, and to "effectually oppose and resist such attempt or attempts as shall be made for carrying into execution by force" the two acts. This Congress appealed to the towns for support. It urged that, when invaded by oppression, resistance became "the Christian and social duty of each individual." The conviction was fast becoming general that force only could decide the contest. Stimulated and sustained by such a public opinion, the committees of safety and supplies were diligent, through the gloomy months of winter, in collecting and storing at Concord and Worcester, materials for the maintenance of an army. Towns voted freely money to arm, equip and discipline "Alarm List Companies." These minute-men were trained often—the towns paying the expense. The company, after its field exercises, would sometimes repair to the meeting-house to hear a patriotic sermon, or partake of an entertainment at the town-house where zealous "Sons of Liberty" would exhort them to prepare to fight bravely for God and their country. Thus an army was in existence around Gage, should he make a foray.

On the 17th of November, Gage's force consisted of eleven foot regiments and the artillery. In December, five hundred marines landed. There were daily mounted in December, 370 men and a field-officers' guard on the neck. The force was brigaded under Brigadier-General Hugh, Earl Percy; Major of Brigade Moncreiff. Brig. Gen. Robt. Pigott; Major of Brigade Small; Third Brigadier Jones; Major of Brigade Hutchinson.

In "The American Revolution" Trevelyan says that King George, March 7th, 1774,—saw in General Gage,—fresh from America,—one of those mischievous public servants who know a colony so much better than the colonists know it themselves: "His language,"—said the king,—"was very consonant to his character of an honest determined man. He says they will be lions, whilst we are lambs: but if we take the resolute part, they will undoubtedly prove very weak."

In January, 1775, King George III reconsidered the favorable opinion which he had formed of General Gage and now declared him "wanting in activity and decision;"—so, in vain he appealed to Amherst to take Gage's place,—offering him a peerage,—but Amherst "could not bring himself to serve against the Americans to whom he had been so much obliged."

American historians like Bancroft and Parkman say that Gage was an "amiable man having reputable military talents." Leslie Stephen refers to his "mild rule when Governor of Montreal" and says that Gage was "brave, not brilliant." After the Provisional Congress refused longer to obey him as Governor, he was blamed at home and abroad for his thankless, futile efforts. When the Colonists began to drop the phrase "Mother England" and to substitute "British" for "English," they began to lampoon Gage as a soldier-governor. Like precedents are elsewhere found in history. Gage was the victim of Lord North's "The king will have it so!" His two principal detractors were his sovereign and his subordinate, Burgoyne. The latter critic, like envious Casca, may be discounted in his aspersions of Gage's "unfitness and incapacity" owing to his own aspirations and vauntings. No expressions of rancour or bitterness exist in Gage's reports. He writes of "Demagogues, seditious, controversionists, factionists, disunionists, armed antagonists, misguided men," and says "the law is studied by everybody in Boston,—Insult and provocation are rife in the air. They are past masters in the art of invective." After the fierce fight of King's Mountain, a headstone was placed for rifleman Major Patrick Ferguson, Royalist. North Carolina has within its limits, besides Mecklenburg and Alamance, the carefully marked battle-field of Guilford Court House and here stands the plain marble shaft of Lieutenant-Colonel Stuart of the Queen's Guards, erected by the Guilford Battle Ground Company in honor of a brave foeman one hundred and fourteen years after his death. American sympathies and recognition went out at the dedication of the monument to Sir Isaac Brock, after Queenstown Heights. The running fights of Lexington and Concord are shown by tablets, but there are at least three unmarked graves tenanted by British soldiers. One is in the Lexington graveyard; two are by the roadside near the statue of the embattled farmer in Concord. These men died doing what they conceived to be their duty. James Russell Lowell pays them fitting tribute as follows:

"These men were brave enough and true
To the hired soldier's bull-dog creed;
What brought them here they never knew,
They fought as suits the English breed;
They came three thousand miles and died
To keep the past upon its throne—
Unheard, beyond the ocean tide,
Their English mother made her moan."
